CHILAQUILES

Chilaquiles are a traditional Mexican dish. Typically, corn tortillas cut in quarters and fried are the basis of the dish. Green or red salsa or mole, is poured over the crispy tortilla triangles. The mixture is simmered until the tortilla starts softening. Eggs (scrambled or fried) and pulled chicken are sometimes added to the mix. The dish is topped with cheese and/or sour cream, and it is served with refried beans. Usually, chilaquiles are eaten at breakfast or brunch. Moreover, chilaquiles are often lauded as a cure for the common hangover; this is because in Mexico it is believed that spicy foods help in the recovery process from a hangover

Our chilaquiles are cook with your choice of sauce and covered with melted cheese, aged cotija cheese and a little touch of sour cream. 2 eggs and served with rice & beans and toast.

Sauces: mild red, medium green or hot tomatillo.

BREAKFAST, LUNCH & SOMETHING ELSE

Molletes

A mollete is made with bolillos (Mexican version of French bread) sliced lengthwise, spread with refried beans, and topped with chihuahua cheese. It is then grilled in an oven until the cheese melts. The beans need to be on the sweeter side, not bitter or heavy. Molletes in Mexico are usually served with salsa or pico de gallo. Molletes may also be topped with sliced ham, chorizo, bacon or mushrooms.

Our molletes are made with sourdough bread, refried beans, melted cheese and served with pico de gallo, sour cream and guacamole, all on the side.
