

We've worked hard to keep the quality of our food, reputation and environment stellar by serving fresh, local seafood and providing a warm family friendly environment. Our seafood originates from the coast of McClellanville SC. McClellanville is a village that began in the late 1860s when local plantation owners A.J. McClellan and R.T. Morrison sold lots in the vicinity of Jeremy Creek to planters of the Santee Delta, who sought relief from summer fevers. The first store opened soon after the Civil War, and the village became the social and economic center for a wide area that produced timber, rice, cotton, naval supplies and seafood. Incorporated in 1926, McClellanville Township became, and remains, best known for its shrimping fleet and seafood industry. In 1989 the town was devastated by the full brunt of Hurricane Hugo, which destroyed homes, downed century old oaks, deposited shrimp boats in front yards, and otherwise altered much of the picturesque character of this historic fishing village. The stronger north side of the eye wall passed directly over the village as a category 4 hurricane. Residents taking refuge in the local high school, a designated storm shelter, were surprised by a storm surge which threatened to drown the refugees. Helping one another in total darkness, they managed to crawl into a space above the false ceilings of the building and fortunately none was lost. McClellanville is a small fishing town in Charleston SC. The population was 459 at the 2000 census. It is situated on the Atlantic coast, on land surrounded by Francis Marion National Forest and has traditionally derived its livelihood from the sea and coast marshes by fishing, shrimping, and oystering. This small town continues to produce seafood that's shipped all the way to Baltimore MD, and will continue to be a forefront supplier for The Crab Pitt.
